Chapter 1 by Supercomicbookgirl

Darkness that's all there is nowadays.

The cold is unbearable but we have managed to survive till this point, but food is starting to run out, now that we can't make more.

Is this the end?

Chapter 2 by YukiM

Once the earth froze and everything was covered in soft white snow there was hardly a way to undo this. The whiteness reflects the light that could bring warmth thus the ice won't melt and the cycle repeats, it's simple, as simple as the fact that we won't survive.

At first the machines and the greenhouses kept all of us fed, but they need power to work and we need fuel to have power. Unfortunately we ran out of diesel a week ago and the food won't last forever, we'll be lucky if it lasts another week on rations.

Problems are nothing new, first it was the cold, then the fights, the arguments, the disputes, because if there was something humans are good at is disagreeing. We got by all of that so much but of course as bad as it might be how it can always get worse
